Title: Orientation Policy

Introduction:

The welcoming of new employees is a collaborative effort that includes Human Resources (HR), the Hiring Section and other teams throughout the Royal Hospital. The aim is to prepare for new hires and provide appropriate guidance and information during the first several days of employment can ensure success of onboarding strategies. This short-term orientation process is not a replacement for on-boarding of employees to their specific role and department, which is a more detailed and a longer process.

The Royal Hospital is committed to inducting/orienting all new employees into the organization, in order to ensure a smooth integration into their role and become operationally competent. The new employee orientation program assists them in adapting to their job, work environment and organization. It is considered as an essential part of their training and development process. It also helps the new staff in understanding the hospital's Vision, Mission and Values and as a result, encourages commitment and engagement to the institution. It is intended to make their transition as easy and smooth as possible. The main goal of the induction program is to facilitate the organizational learning and employee productivity in a minimum short period of time.

The on-boarding and orientation process consist of three phases:

Phase One: On-boarding orientation by the Human Resources(HR) Department:

- First Day: HR will meet the newly hired employee at the start of his/her first day of work to complete new-hire paperwork, prepare key and ID cards, and review benefits information.
- Orientation Meeting: New hires will be scheduled to attend an orientation meeting within the first week of employment. The meeting will be conducted in one full day and will include the following:

periods, travel) and guide them to enter DMS that consisted of all policies.

Phase Two: General (Institutional) Orientation Program by the Department of Training and Studies.

a. The Royal Hospital (RH) induction and orientation program is conducted virtually through the Royal Hospital's Learning Management System (Moodle) and it is accessible to all the RH employees as well as the short training trainee, residents and interns.

a. In this program, employees are expected to learn about our culture from an executive leader who explains our organization's Mission, Vision, Values and Organizational Goals. The new employees are provided with information, contacts and resources to help them navigate and succeed in our organization as new employees.

a. A variety of on boarding topics will be covered during orientation, including:

Introduction to the Royal Hospital structure and the associated National Centers. Human Resources Management, MOH Medical Library Services, Health, Safety and Environment management, AlShifaa System, Cultural Competence, Fire Safety Induction, Infection Control and Prevention Principles, Introduction to Quality and Patient Safety Management, Bioethics Framework and Radiation Sources and Safety.

Phase Three (Departmental Specific Orientation):

a. It is conducted by supervisors in each department.

b. It includes a checklist to ensure that the new employees are provided with a specific (departmental) orientation including the policies and procedures, job description and safety measures.

These stages can be done interchangeable according to the logistics such as the number of new recruitments per month. However, it is mandatory for all new employees to undergo all the phases.

POLICY STATEMENT:

It is the responsibility of all managerial staff, clinical directors and the directors of departments to ensure that the new employees have undergone both the orientation process (institutional and departmental specific) within 30 days of appointment.
